REPORT.

THE facility afforded for the investment of English capital in France, and the consequent identity of commercial interest established between this country and England, have led to the formation of several Anglo-French Companies, for some of the most important Railways on the Continent of Europe, the construction of which has been entrusted to eminent English contractors, who have naturally availed themselves of the experience and skill of English labourers.

If, within the limited sphere of their parochial charge, the resident Clergy in England have been compelled to appeal to companies and contractors connected with railways, in behalf of the labourers and their families, to provide, in some measure, for the religious instruction of this peculiar class of men, by assisting to support additional Clergymen, and establishing extraordinary Schools on their works; it is not surprising, that large bodies of these men, from every part of the United Kingdom, assembled in a foreign land, and deprived of the pastoral care of their lawfully-constituted teachers at home, should excite the compassion, and engage the sympathies, of their fellow-countrymen, who, by Providence, may be cast among them, and who feel an interest in their temporal well-being and their spiritual and eternal good. Such were the sentiments that led to the establishment of the English National Schools on the Rouen and Havre Railway, where by far the larger proportion are English and Irish labourers.

It is now eighteen months since the first of these schools was opened at Malaunay, supported entirely at the expense of Mr. Brassey, one of the contractors.

In the beginning of last year it was proposed to open 'School, No. 2,' at Rouen; in which city, besides the railway men, there is a large English population employed in the gas-works, foundries, &c. An application was addressed to the Directors of the Rouen and Havre Company, and it was most liberally responded to by those gentlemen and others connected with the works: consequently, a large and flourishing School was commenced, which, it is hoped, may be continued long after the completion of the railway in that locality.

His Excellency the British Ambassador was pleased, at this time, to take the Schools under his especial patronage.

At the commencement of another very important branch of the works, at Barentin, the persons about to be employed earnestly requested that their children might have similar opportunities of instruction; promising, that if a Teacher could be procured for them, they would provide a school-room at their own expense. An appeal on their behalf was made to friends in England, which was also cheerfully responded to by them, particularly by the Clergy and other friends at Brighton; and 'School No. 3' was opened at Barentin.

The claims of these Institutions were now respectfully submitted to the benevolent consideration of the Queen Dowager; and her Majesty was most graciously pleased to confer her patronage upon them, and to transmit, in aid of their funds, through the Right Reverend Bishop Luscombe, a donation of 20*l*.

It was now thought desirable that the Schools, which had hitherto been carried on by individual exertion, should be submitted to more general controul; and a Committee was formed, under the Presidency of the Bishop, to which the management and responsibility were transferred.

The Committee, so formed, have thought it desirable to preface the First Report of their proceedings with the foregoing remarks, that the origin and progress of the Schools may be well understood.

The Committee, in commencing their labours, were encouraged by the gratifying announcement that his Majesty the King of the French had been graciously pleased to patronize their efforts by a donation of 1000 francs. The Duchess of Orleans, also, has kindly contributed to the Society's Funds, in the name of Her Royal Highness and that of the Count of Paris.

These sums, with the contributions that have been subsequently received, have enabled the Committee to open 'School No. 4,' at Mirville, near Bolbec, where there is also a large number of English workmen.

Thus the Committee have, at the present time, FOUR SCHOOLS in active operation, in which, since their commencement, 601 children have been admitted, of whom only 290 could say the Lord's Prayer, and 73 could read the Bible: 400 did not know their letters.

In stating that the Schools are in connection with the National Society in London, and that all the Masters are supplied from the Training Schools of that Institution, it is unnecessary for the Committee to explain more particularly the principles upon which the children are taught. The education they receive is a Scriptural education, founded on the doctrines and discipline of the Anglican Church; and their secular instruction is carefully adapted to their social condition. The entire arrangement, order, and discipline of the Schools have been undertaken by the Bishop's Catechist, to whom the religious instruction of the workmen is confided, and who visits daily one or other of the Schools; examining the children class by class, exercising an active and vigilant superintendence over the several Masters and Teachers, and seconding the efforts of the National Society, to maintain in them the cherished principles of the Church to which they belong.

The course of instruction given will be seen from the annexed Time Table.

The children of the Daily Schools are required to attend on Sundays, when the School-rooms are appropriated as Places of Worship for the workmen and others.

The Committee desire to express their humble thanks to Almighty God for the blessing that has hitherto attended their endeavours, both in the pecuniary support they have received, and the success in the instruction they have been enabled to afford. Some children, who, on their admission, did not know their letters, are now in the Bible Class; and most of them have had their minds stored with portions of those Holy Scriptures which are able to make them wise unto salvation. In the spring of last year above thirty of them were presented to the Bishop for Confirmation, at the Schools in Rouen and Malaunay; and a still larger number of Candidates will be ready for the next occasion. One of the boys has been placed by his parents under the care of the Committee, to be trained, in the Madras System, for a National Schoolmaster.

The Masters teach adults and the driving boys in the evening, on their paying ten centimes (one penny) for each lesson.

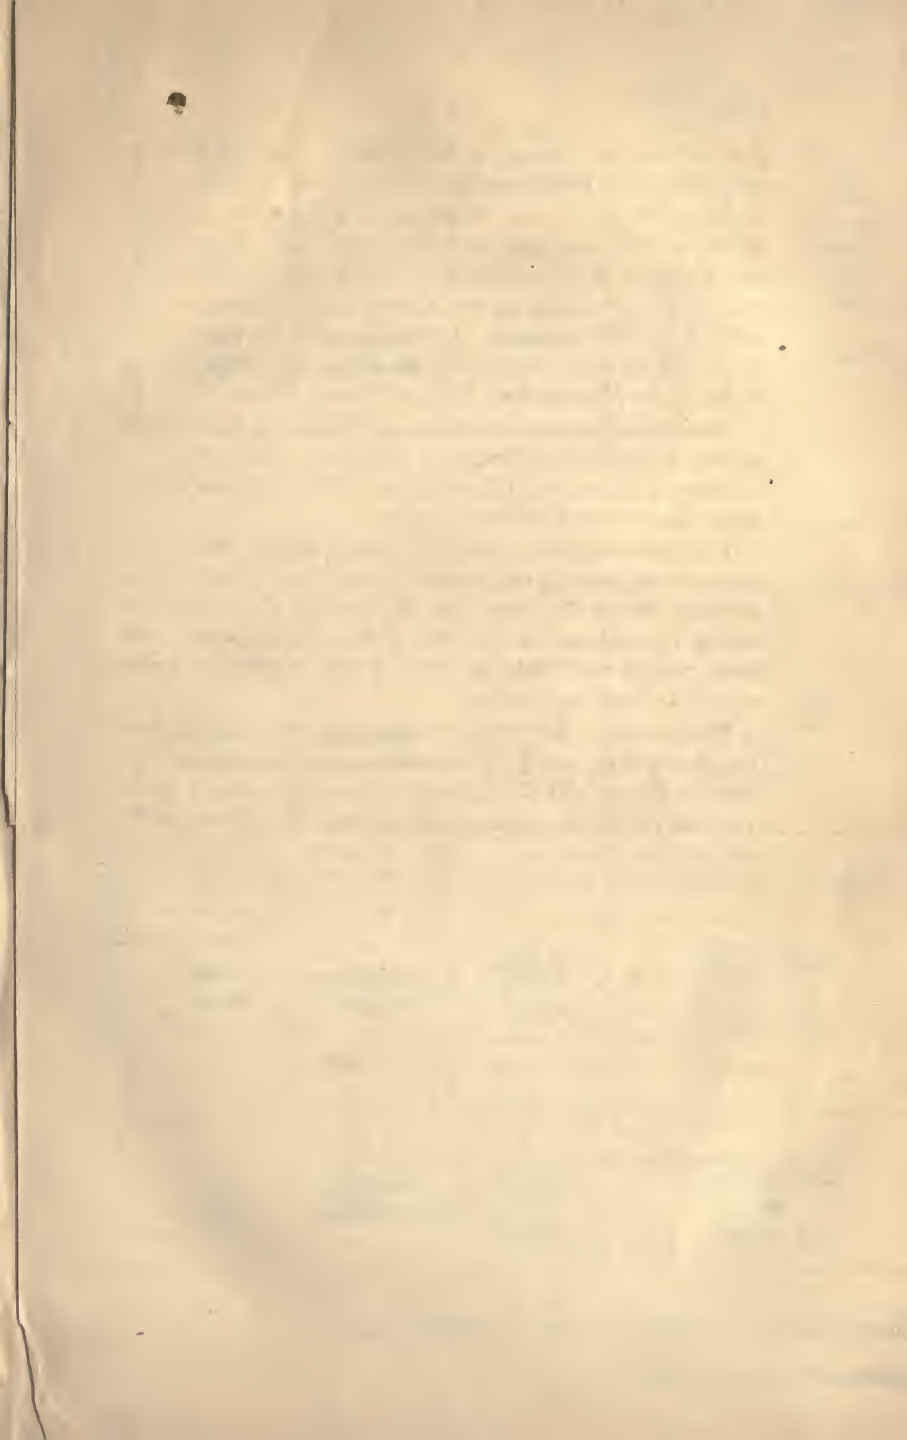

There is a Lending Library at each of the Schools for the use of the workmen and their families.

The Committee desire gratefully to acknowledge the material help afforded them by the National Society, in selecting and appointing efficient Teachers from the Training School at Westminster; and also to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and to the Trinitarian Bible Society, for several grants of their valuable publications.

The Committee lament that no Religious Society in England can supply their numerous countrymen employed on the railways in France with Clergymen, from whom they might derive the full benefit of religious instruction. As railways in this country are increasing, so are increasing the numbers of English families coming hither. The Committee, therefore, would call particular attention to this fact, and pray God that they may not plead in vain for the supply of Ordained Missionaries, who, sanctioned with the Bishop's licence, would act under his superintendence.

The Committee earnestly appeal to the benevolent and wealthy, in behalf of the important Institutions they are associated to promote; and they conclude their Report with sincere thanks to the Rev. Dr. Hawtrey for his excellent Sermon, so successfully preached in behalf of the Schools.

M. H. LUSCOMBE (Bishop),
President of the Committee.
